Our economic development team set new standards in 2018

Alabama's economy is breaking records that some thought we'd never see. The state recently recorded its lowest unemployment rate ever, and more Alabamians are holding down jobs than at any point in our history. With all kinds of industries growing, it's clear that Alabama's economy is hitting on all cylinders.

The Alabama economic development team is making a major contribution to this growth. Their efforts set new standards in 2018, as outlined in the New & Expanding Industry Report, issued today by the Alabama Department of Commerce.

Last year, companies from around the world announced Alabama projects totaling $8.7 billion in new capital investment, beating 2015's record figure of $7.1 billion. Even better, these economic development projects will bring more than 17,000 new jobs to Alabama.

I once served as the assistant director of the Alabama Development Office, so I know the impact of this work. That's why I have embraced economic development as a central pillar of my administration. I believe the results contained in this report show we are making progress in our mission to provide every Alabamian with the opportunity to earn a living and climb the ladder of success.

I'm proud of this success, but we're not about to slow our efforts to move Alabama forward

2018 projects set the stage for robust growth across Alabama

Greg Canfield
Secretary, Alabama Department of Commerce

I believe we will look back at 2018 as a watershed moment for Alabama and its evolving economy. For starters, economic development projects announced last year will lay a foundation for growth that will sustain job creation and extend prosperity across the state. The results are captured in the 2018 New and Expanding Industry Report, which serves as a report card for Alabama's economic development team.

This comprehensive report shows that economic developers across the state successfully worked on 357 projects spanning a wide range of industries in 2018. The team's success is reflected in the more than 17,000 jobs that will be created through these projects. Alabama's economy will benefit from new capital investment totaling $8.7 billion - the highest annual total ever recorded for the state.

The year brought massive developments in the auto sector, led by the Mazda Toyota Manufacturing USA plant in North Alabama. This is the largest single project in terms of investment ($1.6 billion) and job creation (4,000 jobs) for Alabama in a decade. The project will not only bring a fifth automaker, Mazda, to Alabama but also trigger an expansion of the state's auto supply chain, creating thousands of jobs.

In addition, Hyundai and Honda announced plans in 2018 to expand their Alabama operations, while Mercedes-Benz broke ground on a battery pack assembly facility for its upcoming line of Alabama-made electric vehicles.

Meanwhile, new aerospace investments will energize the high-flying industry in the state. Most significantly, Airbus will build a second assembly line at its Mobile manufacturing facility, allowing it to produce the A220 passenger jet in Alabama.

During 2018, technology companies Facebook and Amazon discovered Alabama as a future home, adding a new dimension to the state's economy. Plus, Commerce and its allies engaged in a team effort to persuade a major homegrown tech-focused company, Shipt, to remain in Birmingham and also add 200 jobs.

Alabama's rural areas continue to benefit from rising project activity. Last year, Rex Lumber, Westervelt Co. and Great Southern Wood all announced plans for new lumber production facilities in the state. It's also becoming clear that the Alabama Jobs Act is helping to boost rural counties. In 2018, projects supported by the Jobs Act in rural, or "targeted," counties involved $1.1 billion in investment and over 1,100 jobs.

These successes reinforce my confidence that Alabama is building a more dynamic economy that spreads opportunity far and wide across the state. We still have a lot of work to do, but we have the tools needed for the job, including world-class workforce development programs. Moreover, we have the full support of Governor Kay Ivey, who is committed to creating 21st Century jobs across Alabama.
